INTRODUCTION

In preparation for a lapse in appropriations that has now spanned more than a week, the Office of Management and Budget (“OMB”) and Office of Personnel Management (“OPM”) issued guidance for federal agencies in the event of such a lapse. Included in this guidance were directives to consider possible reductions in force (“RIFs”). Before any lapse—much less any associated RIFs—occurred, Plaintiffs raced to court to challenge the guidance. Days later, Plaintiffs amended their complaint to add over 30 federal agencies as defendants, and they moved for a temporary restraining order (“TRO”) that would “halt any implementation of RIFs during the shutdown” across the federal government. But in their rush to pre-litigate the validity of potential future RIFs, Plaintiffs have ignored fundamental limitations on courts’ ability to hear claims arising out of the federal employment relationship and award emergency relief, as well as on Plaintiffs’ ability to bring suit under the Antideficiency Act and Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”).

To begin, Plaintiffs fail to establish irreparable harm. Their asserted harms—which stem from future loss of federal employment—would not take place until weeks or months from now, if at all. Indeed, Plaintiffs acknowledge that the action that will allegedly cause them irreparable harm—an agency-issued RIF notice—would “call for separation of employment within 30 or 60 days.” TRO Mem. at 13. Because Plaintiffs’ alleged harms hinge on future contingencies that would not materialize until after any TRO presumptively expires, entering the TRO requested by Plaintiffs would serve little purpose. On top of that, for employees of most (though not all) defendant agencies, any harms would occur only after a decisionmaking process by each individual agency that is not currently final and may or may not result in a decision to conduct RIFs. And even if any harms alleged by Plaintiffs might occur absent emergency relief, those harms would be reparable by reinstatement or backpay in a proper forum such as the Merit Systems Protection Board (“MSPB”) or Federal Labor Relations Authority (“FLRA”).

Although the total absence of irreparable harm is enough to defeat Plaintiffs’ arguments for a TRO, the Court could also deny the motion without even considering the equitable requirements for preliminary relief. That is because the Civil Service Reform Act (“CSRA”) and Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (“FSLMRS”), comprehensively address disputes concerning federal employment and labor relations and preclude district court jurisdiction here. Numerous recent decisions in analogous cases confirm as much. And even if the Court had jurisdiction, Plaintiffs fail to show a likelihood of success on the merits because they lack a viable APA or ultra vires cause of action to challenge either the OMB or OPM guidance documents or agency actions implementing them (many of which are hypothetical at this juncture). Plaintiffs seek to enforce limitations on the expenditure of funds by Executive Branch officials imposed by the Antideficiency Act, but that Act provides a comprehensive scheme for addressing violations that precludes any private right of action under the APA.

As to the agency defendants that have not yet made a decision whether and to what extent to conduct RIFs, Plaintiffs' motion also fails because they challenge agency actions that are not final under the APA. For largely the same reasons, this dispute is unripe as to those agencies: Plaintiffs challenge OMB/OPM guidance that expressly contemplates further implementing actions by federal agencies that have not yet occurred (and, in many cases, might never occur). Given the potential variation in agency implementation of any future RIFs under OMB or OPM guidance, Plaintiffs have not shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their facial challenges to the implementation of RIFs at those agencies during the current shutdown. For all these reasons, and because the balance of equities favors the government, the Court should deny Plaintiffs' motion for a TRO.

ISSUES TO BE DECIDED

1. Whether Plaintiffs carried their burden to establish that they are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of emergency injunctive relief.
2. Whether Plaintiffs carried their burden of establishing the Court's jurisdiction over claims arising out of the federal employment relationship.
3. Whether Plaintiffs established that their challenges to hypothetical future agency actions are ripe.
4. Whether Plaintiffs have a cause of action to assert claims based on alleged violations of the Antideficiency Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 1341-42.
5. Whether Plaintiffs challenge final agency action justiciable under the APA.
6. Whether the equities favor emergency relief.

BACKGROUND

I. Legal Framework

A. Agency Authority To Engage In RIFs

For approximately 150 years, Congress has recognized federal agencies' authority to engage in RIFs. Over the decades, courts repeatedly recognized that such reductions were a matter of executive discretion. See, e.g., Keim v. United States, 177 U.S. 290, 295 (1900); Cross v. Dep't of Transp., 127 F.3d 1443, 1447 (Fed. Cir. 1997); Medkirk v. United States, 45 Ct. Cl. 395, 401 (Ct. Cl. 1910). Currently applicable law maintains a large role for the exercise of that discretion. It provides that OPM "shall prescribe regulations for the release of competing employees in a reduction in force which give due effect to—(1) tenure of employment; (2) military preference, subject to section 3501(a)(3) of this title; (3) length of service; and (4) efficiency or performance ratings." 5 U.S.C. § 3502(a)(1)-(4). Under current regulations, agencies may invoke RIF authority "when the release is required because of lack of work; shortage of funds; insufficient personnel ceiling; reorganization; the exercise of reemployment rights or restoration rights; or reclassification of an employee's position due to erosion of duties." 5 C.F.R. § 351.201. A "reorganization" is defined as "the planned elimination, addition, or redistribution of functions or duties in an organization." Id. § 351.203.

The regulations acknowledge agencies' discretion when deciding that a RIF is necessary. "Each agency is responsible for determining the categories within which positions are required, where they are to be located, and when they are to be filled, abolished, or vacated." Id. § 351.201(a)(1). "This includes determining when there is a surplus of employees at a particular location in a particular line of work." Id. The regulations further emphasize that "[e]ach agency covered by this part is responsible for following and applying the regulations in this part when the agency determines that a reduction [in] force is necessary." Id. § 351.204. Generally, federal employees may challenge RIFs at the MSPB. Id. §§ 351.901, 1201.3(a)(6); see also 5 U.S.C. § 7121. The MSPB's decision can be appealed to the Federal Circuit. Markland v. OPM, 140 F.3d 1031, 1033 (Fed. Cir. 1998).

B. Exclusive Statutory Scheme for Review of Employment and Labor Disputes Involving Federal Employees

The CSRA “establishe[s] a comprehensive system for reviewing personnel action taken against federal employees.” Elgin v. Dep’t of the Treasury, 567 U.S. 1, 5 (2012) (citation omitted). If an agency takes a final adverse action against an employee no longer in his or her probationary period—including removal, suspension for more than 14 days, reduction in grade or pay, or furlough for 30 days or less, 5 U.S.C. § 7512—the employee may appeal to the MSPB. Id. § 7513(d). The MSPB may order relief to prevailing employees, including reinstatement, backpay, and attorney’s fees. Id. §§ 1204(a)(2), 7701(g). Non-probationary employees may appeal final MSPB decisions to the Federal Circuit, which generally has “exclusive jurisdiction” over such appeals. 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(9). This statutory review scheme, too, is “exclusive, even for employees who bring constitutional challenges to federal statutes.” Elgin, 567 U.S. at 13.¹

The FSLMRS, set forth in Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (“CSRA”), Pub. L. No. 95-454, § 701, 92 Stat. 1111, 1191-1216 (codified at 5 U.S.C. §§ 7101-35), governs labor relations between the Executive Branch and its employees. The statute “establishes a scheme of administrative and judicial review.” Am. Fed’n of Gov’t Emps., AFL-CIO v. Trump, 929 F.3d 748, 752 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (“AFGE”). Under that scheme, the Federal Labor Relations Authority (“FLRA”) reviews matters including negotiability and “unfair labor practice[]” disputes or claims. See 5 U.S.C. § 7105(a). When reviewing unfair labor practice complaints, it is “the FLRA [that] resolves whether an agency must bargain over a subject, violated the duty to bargain in good faith, or otherwise failed to comply with the Statute.” AFGE, 929 F.3d at 752 (citing 5 U.S.C. §§ 7105(a)(2)(G), 7116(a), 7118)). Direct review of the FLRA’s

¹ Federal employees serving in their probationary periods (for the Competitive Service) or trial periods (for the Excepted Service) generally are not considered “employee[s]” for purposes of the CSRA’s Chapter 75, 5 U.S.C. § 7511(a)(1), but remain properly considered as “applicants” for employment under an extended hiring and evaluation period. See 5 U.S.C. § 7511(a)(1)(A)–(B) (one-year trial period), (C) (two-year trial period); 5 C.F.R. §§ 315.801, 301.806. However, many of the protections of the CSRA’s Chapter 23 extend to both “applicants and employees.” See, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 2302(a)(2)(A)(i)–(xii) (identifying “personnel action[s]” that may form the basis for alleged prohibited personnel practices “with respect to an employee in, or applicant for, a covered position in an agency”). And probationers have appeal rights under 5 C.F.R. § 351.901, see id. § 351.501(b)(2).

1 decisions on unfair labor practice and negotiability issues is available in the courts of appeals. 5 U.S.C.
2 § 7123(a).

3 C. The Antideficiency Act

4 The Antideficiency Act limits the circumstances in which the United States may incur obligations
5 in the absence of, or in excess of, available appropriations. In its current form, the Act (in pertinent part)
6 prohibits expenditures or obligations in excess of the amount of appropriations available, see 31 U.S.C § 7 1341(a)(1)(A), as well as any “contract or obligation for the payment of money before an appropriation is 8 made unless authorized by law.” Id. § 1341(a)(1)(B). When a lapse in appropriated funding occurs, 9 consistent with the Antideficiency Act, agencies must generally cease their activities unless those 10 activities fall within one of the Act’s exceptions, including an exception for “emergencies involving the 11 safety of human life or the protection of property.” Id. § 1342. Congress provided that violations of the 12 Antideficiency Act are addressed through remedies such as fines or removal from office of the official 13 responsible for the unauthorized expenditure. See, e.g., Act of Mar. 3, 1905, ch. 1484, § 4, 33 Stat. 1257-
14 1258 (fines and removal from office); 31 U.S.C. 1349(a) (administrative sanctions up to removal); 31 15 U.S.C. 1350 (criminal penalties for willful violations).

16 II. Factual And Procedural Background

17 Anticipating a potential lapse in appropriations, OMB issued a memorandum to agencies on 18 September 24, 2025. The memorandum encouraged agencies to, “consistent with applicable law, 19 including the requirements of 5 C.F.R. part 351 . . . use this opportunity to consider Reduction in Force 20 (RIF) notices for all employees in programs, projects, or activities (PPAs) that satisfy all three of the 21 following conditions: (1) discretionary funding lapses on October 1, 2025; (2) another source of funding, 22 such as H.R. 1 (Public Law 119-21) is not currently available; and (3) the PPA is not consistent with the 23 President’s priorities.” ECF No. 15-1 at 1 (“OMB Lapse Email”). Soon thereafter, on September 28, 24 2025, OPM issued instructions clarifying OMB’s determination under the Antideficiency Act “that 25 agencies are authorized to direct employees to perform work necessary to administer the RIF process 26 during the lapse in appropriations as excepted activities.” ECF No. 15-2 (“OPM Special Instructions”) at 27 10.

1 Plaintiffs filed this suit on September 30, naming only OMB and OPM (and their Directors) as 2 defendants and asserting two APA claims against the OMB Lapse Email and OPM Special Instructions.
 3 ECF No. 1. At the end of the day on September 30, 2025, the funding for many Executive Branch agencies 4 expired. As a result, those agencies lacked appropriated funding. They began an “orderly shutdown” of 5 certain activities, consistent with the Antideficiency Act and guidance from the Office of Legal Counsel 6 and OMB.

7 On October 4, Plaintiffs amended their complaint to add as defendants more than 30 federal 8 agencies and their heads (together with the original defendants, “the government”), as well as new claims 9 under the Appropriations Clause and for “ultra vires unlawful government action.” ECF No. 15. The 10 same day, they moved for a temporary restraining order, ECF No. 17, seeking to “halt any implementation 11 of RIFs during the shutdown.” Pls.’ Mem. of P&A in Supp. of Mot. for TRO at 2, ECF No. 17-1 (“TRO 12 Mem.”). On October 7, the Court ordered the government to file its response to the TRO motion by 13 October 10 at 3 p.m. ECF No. 27. That Order further requires the government to provide certain 14 information and evidence about agency plans for issuing RIF notices. Id. The information the Court 15 requested is addressed in the attached declaration of Stephen Billy, Senior Advisor at OMB (“Billy 16 Decl.”), and can be summarized as follows:

17 The following Defendant agencies began issuing RIF notices related to the lapse in appropriations 18 today, October 10, 2025, to approximately the following number of employees:

- 19 - Department of Commerce:² approximately 315 employees
- 20 - Department of Education: approximately 466 employees
- 21 - Department of Energy: approximately 187 employees
- 22 - Department of Health and Human Services: between approximately 1100 and 1200 employees
- 23 - Department of Housing and Urban Development: approximately 442 employees

27 _____
 28 ² The United States Patent and Trademark Office, which is a component agency of the Department of Commerce, separately issued lapse-related RIF notices to 126 employees on October 1, 2025.

1 Excepted employees at each of these listed Defendant agencies are working on RIF notices and 2 implementation, with the exception of employees at the Department of Energy, which is not currently 3 experiencing a lapse in appropriations and accordingly has not excepted employees to work on issuance 4 of RIF notices. Billy Decl. ¶ 7.

5 The Environmental Protection Agency also issued a general “intent to RIF” notice to 6 approximately 20-30 employees on October 10, 2025, notifying them that they may be affected by a RIF
7 in the future. EPA has not made a final decision as to whether or when to issue RIF notices to some or all 8 of those employees at some point going forward and is currently deliberating regarding those potential 9 plans. EPA has not excepted employees to work on RIF-related activities. Id. ¶ 8.

10 Other Defendant agencies (in addition to some of those agencies identified above) are actively 11 considering whether to conduct additional RIFs related to the ongoing lapse in appropriations. Other 12 Defendant agencies have made predecisional assessments regarding offices and subdivisions that may be 13 considered for potential RIFs based on the criteria outlined in the OPM Lapse Email. But those 14 assessments remain under deliberation and are not final. Nor is the declarant aware of any Defendant 15 agencies other than those identified above that have made a final decision to issue RIF notices because of 16 the ongoing lapse in appropriations. Consequently, to date, while some agency employees have been 17 excepted to conduct these predecisional assessments and RIF planning, as well as the activity described 18 above, the declarant is not aware of employees of the remaining Defendant agencies having issued RIF 19 notices as an excepted activity during or because of the ongoing lapse in appropriations. Id. ¶ 10.

20 Further, given that (to the knowledge of the declarant) no agency head at a Defendant agency other 21 than those identified above has made a final decision to issue RIF notices during or because of the ongoing 22 lapse in appropriations, and such agencies are instead actively deliberating about and continually revising 23 potential RIF plans in which they have identified offices or subdivisions that meet the criteria in the OMB 24 Lapse Email, the declarant is unaware of any agency other than those identified above having a concrete 25 estimate of how many employees will receive RIF notices. As part of this preliminary work, some 26 agencies have offered preliminary estimates of how many employees might receive RIF notices, but those 27 estimates are subject to change as agencies that are considering potential RIFs actively consider the scope 28

1 of such potential RIFs. Likewise, to the knowledge of the declarant, no agency other than those identified
 2 above has reached a final decision regarding the earliest date that it might issue RIF notices, if any. Id. ¶
 3 11. The situation involving the lapse in appropriations is fluid and rapidly evolving. The statements 4 reflected in the Billy Declaration reflect the current information available. Id. ¶ 12.

5 There are preexisting RIFs which are currently in progress at federal agencies; those RIFs were 6 undertaken prior to the October 1 lapse in appropriations; are unrelated to the OMB Lapse Email; and are 7 not addressed herein. As to these agencies, OPM has advised that continuing to plan for RIFs, or 8 implementing previously-announced RIFs, may, as agencies deem appropriate, be treated as excepted 9 activity. Id. ¶ 9.

10 LEGAL STANDARD

11 A temporary restraining order is an “extraordinary and drastic remedy.” Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S.
 12 674, 689-90 (2008) (citation omitted). A district court should enter preliminary relief only “upon a clear 13 showing that the [movant] is entitled to such relief.” Winter v. NRDC, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008). The 14 moving party must demonstrate (1) that it is likely to succeed on the merits of its claims; (2) that it is likely 15 to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of injunctive relief; (3) that the balance of equities tips in its 16 favor; and (4) that the proposed injunction is in the public interest. Id. at 20. Finally, when “the 17 Government is the opposing party,” the assessment of “harm to the opposing party” and “the public 18 interest” merge. Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435 (2009).

19 ARGUMENT

20 I. Plaintiffs Will Not Suffer Irreparable Harm Absent A TRO.

21 The Court should not issue a TRO because Plaintiffs have not shown that they face a risk of 22 irreparable harm without one. The irreparable harm standard requires Plaintiffs to “demonstrate that 23 irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 22. A “possibility” of 24 irreparable harm is not enough. Stormans, Inc. v. Selecky, 586 F.3d 1109, 1138 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting 25 Winter, 555 U.S. at 375-76).

26 Plaintiffs fail to carry that burden here. Most obviously, they seek a TRO that would take effect 27 immediately and last “for a period of fourteen days,” ECF No. 17 at 2; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(2), 28

1 but acknowledge that the action that will allegedly cause them irreparable harm—an agency-issued RIF
 2 notice—will “call for separation of employment within 30 or 60 days.” TRO Mem. at 13; see also ECF
 3 No. 15-2 (OPM guidance that “[a]ny RIF notice issued shortly before or after the lapse in appropriations 4 that commences on October 1, 2025, will generally provide for a full 60-day notice period during which 5 employees will retain employment status”). Because Plaintiffs do not allege any harm that would take 6 place during the period of time their requested TRO would cover, the Court can deny their motion on this 7 basis alone.

8 Even setting aside the timing, the employment-related harms Plaintiffs assert—up to and including 9 loss of federal employment—are generally not irreparable. See, e.g., Sampson v. Murray, 415 U.S. 61, 10 88-91 (1974) (rejecting notion “that either loss of earnings or damage to reputation might afford a basis 11 for a finding of irreparable injury and provide a basis for temporary injunctive relief”); Hartikka v. United 12 States, 754 F.2d 1516, 1518 (9th Cir. 1985) (treating “loss of income, loss of retirement and relocation
 13 pay, and damage to . . . reputation” as “insufficient under the Sampson standard to justify injunctive 14 relief”); Garcia v. United States, 680 F.2d 29, 31-32 (5th Cir. 1982) (“It is practically universal 15 jurisprudence in labor relations in this country that there is an adequate remedy for individual wrongful 16 discharge after the fact of discharge.”). That is because the MSPB may make employees with meritorious 17 claims (if any) whole through reinstatement, backpay, and attorney’s fees. 5 U.S.C. §§ 1204(a)(2), 18 7701(g); see also Smith v. Dep’t of Army, 458 F.3d 1359, 1366 (Fed. Cir. 2006) (“Reinstatement, back 19 pay, and benefits are routinely awarded by the Board[.]”). And although Plaintiffs cite employees’ 20 possible loss of “wages and health benefits for themselves and their families, including by having to 21 relocate” if they are separated from government service, TRO Mem. at 23, the Supreme Court has 22 explained that these sorts of burdens common to most losses of government employment are insufficient.
 23 See Sampson, 415 U.S. at 92 n.68 (“insufficiency of savings or difficulties in immediately obtaining other 24 employment—external factors common to most discharged employees and not attributable to any unusual 25 actions relating to the discharge itself—will not support a finding of irreparable injury”); see also Smith 26 v. Dep’t of Army, 89 M.S.P.R. 82, 83 (2001) (noting remedial actions for life and health insurance for 27 federal employee reinstated after RIF). Given the availability of these remedies, Plaintiffs’ injuries are

1 remediable. It is irrelevant that “[d]amages are not available in APA cases,” TRO Mem. at 23; Plaintiffs 2 cannot make otherwise reparable injuries irreparable by choosing to proceed under the APA.

3 Plaintiffs also posit different RIF-related alleged harms to other members, including (1) a 4 possibility of “radically altered workplaces” and increased workload for those employees who “are not 5 included in the RIF or receive a RIF that is revoked,” and (2) an alleged “intangible harm of political 6 discrimination,” which Plaintiffs speculate would be suffered by “employees who receive RIF notices” 7 based on “their perceived political affiliation.” See TRO Mem. at 23-24. But such speculative and 8 downstream harms cannot justify emergency injunctive relief. As noted, the RIFs themselves—which 9 Plaintiffs allege would cause the altered workplaces or increased workload—could be remedied at final 10 judgment in a proper forum, absent the extraordinary preliminary relief Plaintiffs seek. More 11 fundamentally, a TRO should not issue on the basis of alleged harm to employees who ultimately will not 12 be subject to a RIF: if the employees who face RIFs are not entitled to injunctive relief as an equitable 13 matter (and they are not), it would turn equity on its head to grant injunctive relief based on more remote, 14 attenuated harms to other employees based on speculation that they might be indirectly affected by the 15 separation of some employees. Indeed, beyond irreparable harm, Plaintiffs have offered no theory that 16 would support standing for members who are not themselves subject to RIFs to bring this challenge.
 17 Likewise, if a TRO were ordered on the basis of RIFs of non-member employees, it would raise the 18 additional problem that Plaintiffs likely lack standing to pursue relief on behalf of non-members. See 19 FDA v. All for Hippocratic Med., 602 U.S. 367, 382 (2024) (noting that “when (as here) a plaintiff 20 challenges the government’s unlawful regulation . . . of someone else, standing is not precluded, but it is 21 ordinarily substantially more difficult to establish” (citation and quotation marks omitted)); Trump v.
 22 CASA, Inc., 606 U.S. 831, 841 (2025) (injunctions prohibiting government action as to non-plaintiffs are 23 generally not an available remedy). It is Plaintiffs’ burden to establish standing, DaimlerChrysler Corp.
 24 v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 342 (2006), and they must establish that their members are subject to any given 25 RIF notice.

26 Plaintiffs’ assertion that their members will suffer intangible harms of political discrimination 27 similarly fails. They offer nothing but speculation and scattered quotations to support their assertion that any political discrimination will occur. The guidance documents Plaintiffs challenge do not contemplate targeting individuals based on political affiliation. Without evidence that the “intangible” harm they describe is imminently likely to occur, Plaintiffs cannot establish irreparable harm. Plaintiffs do not even explain the kind of political-discrimination claim that their alleged harm, if actually suffered, would support. And in any event, such harm would not be irreparable because, as discussed above, the MSPB may make wrongly removed employees whole through reinstatement, backpay, and attorney’s fees.

As to all agency defendants except the Department of Energy, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Department of Treasury, Department of Commerce, Department of Education, Department of Homeland Security, and Department of Health and Human Services—where RIFs have been or soon will be noticed—Plaintiffs’ irreparable-harm theories fail for an additional reason. Specifically, for employees of the 26 remaining agencies at which RIFs have not yet been noticed, any harms would occur only after a decisionmaking process by each individual agency that is not currently final and may or may not result in a decision to conduct RIFs of indeterminate scope. The non-final nature of these agencies’ decisionmaking process is discussed further below, in Section III.B. In addition to defeating Plaintiffs’ motion on APA final-action grounds as to employees at the 26 remaining agencies, the lack of finality also gives the Court an independent basis to reject Plaintiffs’ irreparable-harm theory as to those employees. See Selecky, 586 F.3d at 1138.

II. This Court Lacks Jurisdiction.

A. Plaintiffs’ Claims Are Precluded By The CSRA And FSLMRS.

A mounting body of decisions establishes that claims like Plaintiffs’ involve the type of federal employment disputes over which District Courts lack jurisdiction. Plaintiffs seek to enjoin the defendant agencies from “taking any action to issue or administer any [RIF] notices to federal employees” or “taking any action to implement or enforce the OMB Lapse Memorandum [Email]” and related OPM guidance “that purport to authorize administration of RIFs during a shutdown.” Proposed Order at 2-3, ECF No. 17-2. No matter how Plaintiffs style their claims, these disputes concern the federal employer-employee relationship and must be channeled through the avenues created by Congress under the CSRA and the FSLMRS.

1 Congress has “established a comprehensive system” as the “exclusive means” for reviewing the 2 federal agency employment decisions challenged by Plaintiffs here. Elgin, 567 U.S. at 5, 8 (citation 3 omitted). The CSRA, together with the FSLMRS, “creates an integrated scheme of administrative and 4 judicial review, wherein the Congress intentionally provided—and intentionally chose not to provide—5 particular forums and procedures for particular kinds of claims.” Am. Fed’n of Gov’t Emps. v. Sec’y of 6 the Air Force, 716 F.3d 633, 636 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (“Air Force”) (cleaned up). Congress allowed certain 7 employees to challenge agency personnel decisions “by litigating their claims through the statutory 8 scheme in the context of [a] concrete” dispute, limited to the claims and remedies provided by Congress.
9 See AFGE, 929 F.3d at 757. Such an exclusive alternative scheme displaces district-court jurisdiction 10 under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 if “the claims at issue are of the type Congress intended to be reviewed within the 11 statutory structure.” Free Enter. Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477, 489 (2010) (cleaned up).

12 Plaintiffs’ claims are of the type Congress intended to be reviewed in the first instance by agency 13 adjudicators—not federal district courts. See AFGE, 929 F.3d at 755. Plaintiffs preemptively challenge 14 agencies’ future potential RIF decisions. Proposed Order at 2-3. But federal employees (such as 15 Plaintiffs’ members) who believe a RIF has violated a statute or regulation may seek redress only through 16 the MSPB, see 5 U.S.C. § 7701(a); 5 C.F.R. § 351.901, or another specialized scheme for administrative 17 review. See, e.g., 22 U.S.C. § 4010a(c); see also Alder v. Tennessee Valley Auth., 43 F. App’x 952, 956
18 (6th Cir. 2002) (“[A] challenge to [a] reduction-in-force decision” is “a fundamental employment claim 19 subject to MSPB review.”).

20 Plaintiffs may not evade this scheme by bringing claims as unions asserting harms to their 21 members or asserting a loss of membership dues. Otherwise, any unionized employee “could circumvent 22 the CSRA’s strictures.” See Air Force, 716 F.3d at 639. Moreover, the FSLMRS “establishes a 23 comprehensive scheme to deal with labor relations in federal employment,” which channels adjudication 24 to the FLRA followed by direct review in the courts of appeals. Id. at 636 (citation omitted). Under the 25 FSLMRS, unions may file a grievance under preexisting collective bargaining agreements “concerning 26 any matter relating to the employment of any employee,” “the effect or interpretation, or a claim of breach, 27
28

1 of a collective bargaining agreement,” or “any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of 2 any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment.” 5 U.S.C. §§ 7103(a)(9), 7121(a)(1).

3 These comprehensive provisions foreclose Plaintiffs’ attempt to raise their labor dispute in district 4 court. Indeed, numerous courts in recent months and years have applied the same preclusion principle to 5 similar federal-employment suits brought by both employees and unions (including Plaintiff AFGE). See, 6 e.g., AFGE, 929 F.3d at 753, 761 (challenge to three executive orders governing collective bargaining and 7 grievance processes); Maryland v. U.S. Dep’t of Agriculture, No. 25-1248, 2025 WL 1073657 (4th Cir.
8 Apr. 9, 2025) (termination of probationary employees); Am. Foreign Serv. Ass’n v. Trump, No. 25-cv-9 352, 2025 WL 573762, at *8-*11 (D.D.C. Feb. 21, 2025) (challenge to employees’ placement on 10 administrative leave); Nat’l Treasury Emps. Union v. Trump, 770 F. Supp. 3d 1, 7-11 (D.D.C. 2025) 11 (challenge to terminations of probationary employees, anticipated RIFs, and deferred-resignation 12 program); Am. Fed’n of Gov’t Emps., AFL-CIO v. Ezell, No. 25-cv-10276, 2025 WL 470459, at *1-*3 (D.
13 Mass. Feb. 12, 2025) (challenge to deferred-resignation program); Widakuswara v. Lake, No. 25-5144, 14 2025 WL 1288817, at *2 (D.C. Cir. May 3, 2025) (noting that “[w]e have long held that federal 15 employees may not use the Administrative Procedure Act to challenge agency employment actions.” 16 (quoting Filebark v. U.S. Dep’t of Transp., 555 F.3d 1009, 1010 (D.C. Cir. 2009))); Nat’l Treasury 17 Employees Union v. Vought, 149 F.4th 762, 775 (D.C. Cir. 2025) (“NTEU”) (holding that “the claims seek 18 redress for allegedly unlawful terminations—the heartland of CSRA coverage” and “the CSRA precludes 19 district-court jurisdiction over the claims of the” unions). Although this Court disagreed when issuing an 20 injunction in a different employment-related case (an injunction that was subsequently stayed, then 21 vacated), see Am. Fed’n of Gov’t Emps. v. Trump, 2025 WL 1482511, at *27 (N.D. Cal. May 22, 2025), 22 stay granted, 606 U.S. ___, 2025 WL 1873449 (July 8, 2025) (Mem.), and injunction vacated, ___ F.4th __ 23 ___, 2025 WL 2716266 (9th Cir. Sept. 19, 2025), more recent appellate decisions like NTEU make ever 24 clearer that channeling precludes district-court jurisdiction.

25 As these decisions show, it is well settled that claims like Plaintiffs’ are channeled to agency 26 adjudication. To the extent the Court specifically considers the Thunder Basin Coal Co. v. Reich factors 27 anew, they reinforce that Plaintiffs are required to channel the claims asserted here. See 510 U.S. 200 28

(1994). The first step under Thunder Basin—Congress’s intent to preclude—is satisfied: Congress established a detailed scheme for adjudicating federal labor disputes. The FSLMRS provides for “administrative and judicial review” regarding disputes between employees and their federal employers and disputes between unions representing those employees and the government. AFGE, 929 F.3d at 752. The factors considered under the second step—(i) “could precluding district court jurisdiction foreclose all meaningful judicial review of the claim”; (ii) “is the claim wholly collateral to the statute’s review provisions”; and (iii) “is the claim outside the agency’s expertise,” Axon Enterprise, Inc. v. Fed. Trade Comm’n, 598 U.S. 175, 186 (2023) (cleaned up)—also support channeling.

Here, as in the 2019 AFGE case, parties can bring certain claims through the administrative process “in the context of concrete . . . disputes.” 929 F.3d at 757. Similarly, if any Plaintiff thinks particular RIFs conflict with any federal rule, guidance, or statute, they may assert such a claim within one of the review schemes. See, e.g., Marshall v. HHS, 587 F.3d 1310, 1318 (Fed. Cir. 2009) (reversing based on an erroneous statutory interpretation); Lyons v. Dep’t of Veteran’s Affs., 273 F. App’x 929, 931 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (considering whether regulation was violated); Fed. L. Enf’t Offs. Ass’n v. Ahuja, 62 F.4th 551, 560 (D.C. Cir. 2023) (noting challenges to OPM guidance through the MSPB system). If dissatisfied with a ruling of the MSPB or FLRA, Plaintiffs or their members may obtain judicial review in the courts of appeals. 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(9); 5 U.S.C. § 7123.

Nor are Plaintiffs’ claims “wholly collateral” to the CSRA and FLRA scheme. What matters for this inquiry is whether the subject of Plaintiffs’ challenge is a matter covered by the CSRA and FSLMRS, not how Plaintiffs describe their claims. See Elgin, 567 U.S. at 22. Here, the subject of Plaintiffs’ claims is RIFs and related federal employment and labor matters; their contention that the OMB Lapse Email and OPM Special Instructions are unlawful is simply the “vehicle” by which they seek to stop RIFs from taking place. See id. Plaintiffs ask “for the same relief that they could ultimately obtain through the statutory scheme, namely rulings on whether the executive orders are lawful and directives prohibiting agencies from following the executive orders.” AFGE, 929 F.3d at 760. Thus, “[t]heir challenge is not wholly collateral to the statutory scheme.” Id.

1 Finally, and for similar reasons, the agency may bring its expertise to bear on many of the questions
 2 raised. The application of the RIF regulations and the statutes governing agency operations are matters
 3 on which administrative agencies have expertise. See id. (reasoning that “[m]any of [plaintiffs] claims
 4 allege that the executive orders direct agencies to violate the Statute by refusing to bargain over mandatory 5 subjects or by taking actions that are inconsistent with the duty to bargain in good faith” and that “[t]hese 6 matters lie at the core of the FLRA’s ‘specialized expertise in the field of federal labor relations’”).

7 B. As To The Agencies That Have Not Yet Made RIF Decisions, Plaintiffs’ Request For 8 Emergency Relief Is Not Ripe.

9 Plaintiffs’ request for a TRO is not ripe as to the employees at the 26 agencies that have not yet 10 announced RIFs, because their theories “rest[] upon contingent future events that may not occur as 11 anticipated, or indeed may not occur at all.” Bova v. City of Medford, 564 F.3d 1093, 1096 (9th Cir. 2009)
 12 (citation omitted). Specifically, they seek to forestall hypothetical agency actions—“mass RIFs,” TRO 13 Mem. at 2—that they acknowledge have not occurred and are not certain to occur. See id. (speculating 14 about when such RIFs “are likely to begin”). That strategy cannot succeed because if “the supposed injury 15 has not materialized and may never materialize,” the “dispute is more of an abstraction than an actual 16 case” and cannot “survive the standing/ripeness inquiry.” Montana Env’tl. Info. Ctr. v. Stone-Manning, 17 766 F.3d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 2014) (cleaned up).

18 Plaintiffs try to get around this deficiency by asserting that the OMB Lapse Email and OPM 19 Special Instructions are binding on agencies. See TRO Mem. at 7; see also, e.g., id. at 18 (characterizing 20 OMB and OPM as “direct[ing] other agencies”). But these documents are not binding because individual 21 agencies—not OMB or OPM—are the entities that would conduct any RIFs. They are also the entities 22 that would make any final decision whether to do so. See OMB Lapse Email at 1 (directing agencies to 23 “use this opportunity to consider Reduction in Force (RIF) notices”). Specifically, each agency will 24 conduct its own individualized analysis of whether a RIF is necessary or appropriate. And all agencies’ 25 planning remains subject to change. In other words, individual agencies are taking the guidance at its 26 word and considering whether the relevant factors in the guidance support RIFs at particular agencies.

1 See id. at 2 (listing relevant factors in determining whether to issue RIF notices). While that process of 2 consideration continues, Plaintiffs’ claims with respect to these agencies are not ripe.

3 III. Plaintiffs’ Claims Are Not Likely To Succeed On The Merits.

4 A. Plaintiffs Lack A Cause Of Action To Challenge Violations Of The Antideficiency 5 Act.

6 Even if Plaintiffs’ motion did not fail for lack of jurisdiction or the other reasons addressed above, 7 it would fail because Plaintiffs lack a cause of action to bring this sprawling challenge to all potential and 8 hypothetical agency RIFs during the current lapse in appropriations. The crux of their lawsuit is that 9 internal OMB and OPM guidance documents contain directives that “are directly contrary to the 10 Antideficiency Act.” TRO Mem. at 15. But they do not attempt to sue directly under the Act – and with 11 good reason. That statute does not contain an express cause of action and provides no basis for implying 12 one. See Lil’ Man in the Boat, Inc. v. City & Cnty. of San Francisco, 5 F.4th 952, 958 (9th Cir. 2021) 13 (“‘[C]lear and unambiguous terms’ are ‘required for Congress to create new rights enforceable under an 14 implied private right of action.’” (quoting Gonzaga Univ. v. Doe, 536 U.S. 273, 290 (2002))). The 15 Antideficiency Act operates as a restriction on the actions of Executive Branch officers; it does not 16 regulate the rights of—much less create rights for—individuals. Thus, courts have had no trouble 17 determining that “[n]o private right of action for declaratory, mandatory or injunctive relief exists under’ 18 the Anti-Deficiency Act.” Feldman v. Bowser, 315 F. Supp. 3d 299, 305 (D.D.C. 2018) (Jackson, J.) 19 (citation omitted); see also, e.g., Stoner v. Ariz. Dep’t of Economic Sec., 2024 WL 3818614, at *3 (D.
 20 Ariz. Aug. 14, 2024) (“[N]one of these statutes provide Plaintiff with a private right of action.”).

21 Likely recognizing this limitation, Plaintiffs assert their claims under the APA or as a challenge to 22 “ultra vires unlawful governmental action.” But neither theory allows for judicial review of Plaintiffs’
 23 claims. Under the APA, a cause of action is not available if any other “statutes preclude judicial review.”
 24 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). Here, Plaintiffs cannot rely on the APA cause of action to assert alleged violations 25 of the Antideficiency Act because the comprehensive and particularized structure of the latter precludes 26 resort to the generalized former. Cf. Match-E-Be-Nash-She-Wish Band of Pottawatomí Indians v.
 27 Patchak, 567 U.S. 209, 215 (2012) (“When Congress has dealt in particularity with a claim and has 28

1 intended a specified remedy . . . to be exclusive, that is the end of the matter; the APA does not undo the 2 judgment.” (cleaned up)).

3 An alternative statutory scheme can preclude APA review either through “express language” or 4 through “the structure of the statutory scheme, its objectives, its legislative history, and the nature of the 5 administrative action involved.” Block v. Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 467 U.S. 340, 345 (1984). The 6 Antideficiency Act establishes a comprehensive remedial scheme, and the types of remedies it affords 7 differ in kind from the type of broad judicial relief against agency action available under a statute like the 8 APA. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2) (authorizing courts to “hold unlawful and set aside agency action” based on 9 certain findings). In particular, where an Executive Branch employee has allegedly violated the 10 Antideficiency Act, that employee’s agency head must report the violation to the President, Congress, and 11 the Comptroller General. See 31 U.S.C. § 1351. Sanctions for violations include administrative discipline, 12 removal from office of the individual responsible for the unauthorized expenditure, and criminal penalties.
13 See id. §§ 1349, 1350. Such remedies avoid the disruption of retroactive invalidation or vacatur of agency 14 action sometimes awarded by courts under the APA. By addressing violations through after-the-fact 15 reporting and enforcement, including through the involvement of Congress’ Comptroller General, 16 Congress intended to foreclose private enforcement of the Antideficiency Act through individual suits for 17 injunctive or set-aside relief against agency actions allegedly taken in violation of the Act. See, e.g., 18 Global Health Council v. Trump, --- F. 4th ---, 2025 WL 2480618, at *10-11 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 28, 2025)
19 (similarly reticulated statutory enforcement scheme precluded APA review; “it does not make sense that 20 the Congress would craft a complex scheme of interbranch dialogue but sub silentio also provide a 21 backdoor for citizen suits to enforce the [statute] at any time and without notice to the Congress of the 22 alleged violation”).

23 Nor can Plaintiffs avoid these strictures by relying on an extra-statutory, or ultra vires, cause of 24 action. Such “last resort” claims, Terveer v. Billington, 34 F. Supp. 3d 100, 123 (D.D.C. 2014), are not 25 cognizable where “a statutory review scheme provides aggrieved persons ‘with a meaningful and adequate 26 opportunity for judicial review,’ or if a statutory review scheme forecloses all other forms of judicial 27 review,” Nuclear Regulatory Comm’n v. Texas, 605 U.S. 665, 681 (2025) (quoting Bd. of Govs. of the 28

1 Fed. Res. Sys. v. MCorp Fin., Inc., 502 U.S. 32, 43-44 (1991)). As discussed above, that is the case here, 2 where Congress, through the FSLMRS and CSRA, established exclusive procedures for review of (and 3 appropriate remedies for) the type of claims at issue here and foreclosed private enforcement of the 4 Antideficiency Act through the APA cause of action.

5 In any event, even where potentially cognizable, ultra vires claims are intended to be of “extremely 6 limited scope.” Terveer, 34 F. Supp. 3d at 123. The “very stringent standard,” Nyunt v. Chairman, Broad.
 7 Bd. of Govs., 589 F.3d 445, 449 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (Kavanaugh, J.), is only met in situations where an 8 Executive Branch officer “acts without any authority whatever.” Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v.
 9 Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 101 n.11 (1984) (cleaned up). That standard is not met here, where (as Plaintiffs 10 seem to recognize) OMB and OPM have authority to offer guidance on agency responses to lapses in 11 appropriations, and individual federal agencies plainly have general authority to conduct RIFs. See supra
 12 Background Section I.; see also Nuclear Regulatory Comm’n, 605 U.S. at 681-82 (stating an ultra vires 13 claim is “essentially a Hail Mary pass” that “in court as in football, . . . rarely succeeds”). Plaintiffs simply 14 argue that the government has, in various ways, exceeded that authority; as the Supreme Court has made 15 clear, courts should reject such attempts to “dress up a typical statutory-authority argument as an ultra 16 vires claim.” Id. at 682.

17 B. Potential Future RIF Decisions At Most Of The Defendant Agencies Are Not Final 18 Agency Actions.

19 To the extent their challenge is to agencies’ hypothetical future decisions to conduct RIFs, see, 20 e.g., TRO Mem. at 21, Plaintiffs’ motion fails because those decisions are not final. “[F]inal agency 21 action” is a requirement for APA review. 5 U.S.C. § 704. To meet this definition, an action must “mark 22 the consummation of the agency’s decisionmaking process”—rather than being “of a merely tentative or 23 interlocutory nature”—and it “must be one by which ‘rights or obligations have been determined,’ or from 24 which ‘legal consequences will flow.’” Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177–78 (1997) (citation omitted).
 25 By their own terms, the OMB and OPM documents provide guidance and suggestions for agencies to 26 consider as they respond to a lapse in appropriations and, more importantly, expressly contemplate that 27 further agency action will be necessary to implement any RIF. See ECF No. 15-1 (OMB memo directing 28

1 agencies to “consider [RIF] notices for” certain employees, to “revise their RIFs as needed to retain the 2 minimal number of employees necessary to carry out statutory functions,” and to submit any proposed 3 RIF plan to OMB (emphasis added)); ECF No. 15-2 at 10 (OPM “special instructions” to agencies for 4 “administering an agency shutdown of operations due to a lapse in appropriations,” recognizing the “RIF 5 process” that each agency must undertake and encouraging any agency issuing RIF notices to “prepare a 6 decisional memorandum that documents and supports RIF-related decision-making”). Most of the 7 defendant agencies have not generated a final action as a result of those documents. And as the documents 8 recognize, it is up to the agencies to decide whether and how to implement any RIF in response to the 9 lapse in appropriations.

10 Indeed, Plaintiffs themselves describe potential agency decisions in hypothetical terms. See id. at 11 22 (suggesting, without identifying one, that an agency action effectuating a RIF “would be final agency 12 action” (emphasis added)). As to the 26 agencies that have not yet made final lapse-related RIF decisions,³ 13 the Court should reject Plaintiffs’ attempt to circumvent—with reference only to abstract legal 14 interpretations and hypothetical actions—the APA’s requirement that judicial review focus on discrete, 15 identifiable agency action. See Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed’n, 497 U.S. 871, 891 (1990) (“[R]espondent 16 cannot seek wholesale improvement of this program by court decree, rather than in the offices of the 17 Department or the halls of Congress, where programmatic improvements are normally made.”).

18 IV. The Balance Of The Equities Weighs In The Government’s Favor.

19 The balance of harms and public interest strongly cut against entering a TRO. First, the requested 20 TRO would irreparably harm the government. The President, through OMB, has determined that agencies 21 should operate more efficiently and has directed them to consider steps to optimize their workforces in 22 light of the ongoing lapse in appropriations. A TRO would prevent agencies from taking steps to 23 implement this policy priority and determining how best to organize their workforces, even though the 24 government has “traditionally been granted the widest latitude in the ‘dispatch of its own internal affairs.’” 25
 26

27 ³ As noted above, EPA has issued intent-to-RIF notices to certain employees, but has not made a 28 final decision as to the scope or timing of any potential RIF.

1 Sampson, 415 U.S. at 83. And it would halt agencies from engaging in the kind of RIF proceedings
2 suggested by OMB, with implications across the Executive Branch.

3 Moreover, as to the agencies that have noticed RIFs and those that may ultimately plan to conduct 4 a RIF through appropriate processes in response to the lapse in appropriations, a TRO would require those 5 agencies to retain employees they might otherwise have discharged (or reassigned) via RIF. The 6 government will not be able to recover the cost of those salaries and benefits, even if the court’s order is 7 vacated. See Maryland, 2025 WL 1073657, at *1. Such an order could cost the government millions of 8 dollars each week. Finally, a district court’s exercise of jurisdiction over a federal employment dispute—9 in the face of a comprehensive remedial scheme for resolving such issues—has a “disruptive effect on the 10 administrative processes established by the government to handle cases such as these.” Garcia, 680 F.2d 11 at 32.

12 On the other side of the ledger, Plaintiffs have not established irreparable injury. As discussed 13 above, in the ordinary course, employment disputes rarely justify preliminary relief because there are 14 procedures by which a terminated employee may obtain backpay following final judgment. See, e.g., 15 Sampson, 415 U.S. at 92 & n.68. And Plaintiffs’ irreparable-harm arguments fail for the additional reasons 16 discussed above. Moreover, Plaintiffs would need to—and have not—established standing to seek the 17 full scope of relief that they seek. See supra Section I. At a bare minimum, any relief should be limited 18 to particular agency subcomponents in which Plaintiffs establish they have members who will be subject 19 to lapse-related RIFs.

20 In sum, the equities support denying Plaintiffs’ motion.

21 V. Any Injunctive Relief Should Be Stayed Pending Appeal And Be Accompanied By A Bond, 22 And No Declaration Should Be Required.

23 If the Court issues any injunctive relief, the government respectfully requests that such relief be 24 stayed pending the disposition of any appeal that is authorized by the Solicitor General, or at a minimum, 25 administratively stayed for a period of seven days to allow the government to consider whether to seek an 26 emergency, expedited stay from the court of appeals if an appeal is authorized.

1 The government also respectfully requests that any injunctive relief be accompanied by a bond 2 under Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c), which provides that “[t]he court may issue a preliminary injunction or a 3 temporary restraining order only if the movant gives security in an amount that the court considers proper 4 to pay the costs and damages sustained by any party found to have been wrongfully enjoined or 5 restrained.” Here, an appropriate bond would be commensurate to the salaries and benefits the 6 government must pay for any employees it would prefer to separate from service, but would be prevented 7 from doing so for the duration of any preliminary relief. The government is prepared to submit evidence 8 concerning the appropriate amount of a bond.

9 Finally, Plaintiffs ask that the government be required to “serve and file an accounting of all RIFs 10 enjoined by this TRO within two business days, including but not limited to a description of the agency 11 planning to impose the enjoined RIF, the number of employees intended to be included in the enjoined 12 RIF, and description of the PPAs that Defendants included in the enjoined RIF.” ECF No. 17 at 2. They 13 also ask that the Court order the government to “file a declaration(s) verifying” compliance with any TRO 14 “within two (2) business days.” The Court should not order such extraordinary filings. Each goes well 15 beyond maintaining the status quo and is certainly not “necessary to provide relief” to injured parties.
 16 Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 360 (1996). Not to mention that, as to most of the defendant agencies, the 17 requested information for the “accounting” would likely be preliminary, subject to change, non-final, and 18 of minimal (if any) use to any party or the Court. Filing such a broad “accounting”—which Plaintiffs 19 effectively admit is a fishing expedition to require the government to “reveal [its] actions now,” TRO 20 Mem. at 25—just two days after entry of emergency relief would also divert valuable resources away from 21 agency compliance efforts. Instead, if the Court orders relief, the presumption of regularity should apply, 22 and the Court should presume the government will comply with any such order. See Am. Cargo Transp., 23 Inc. v. United States, 625 F.3d 1176, 1180 (9th Cir. 2010) (“[W]e presume the government is acting in 24 good faith.”).

25 CONCLUSION

26 The Court should deny Plaintiffs’ motion.
