PROTEST/HECKLER PLAN

- This is a non-ticketed event. The host committee set up a website with an RSVP system, simply so they could gauge interest. Because it is a non-ticketed event, should a heckler materialize, neither staff nor local law enforcement will be able to remove the individuals (since they cannot disinvite an individual when a ticket was not issued). Staff has been briefed on the USSS heckler policy and is aware that USSS will not engage unless there is a threat to the protectee and local law enforcement will not engage unless there is a threat to the safety of other guests.

CAF,

Below and attached FYSA.

While no action is necessary at this time (I&A to respond), the letter is being provided due to the senders (Thompson and Slotkin) and expected upcoming discussions between them and DIR Murray

+ Letter's reference to NSSEs (note: DHS has "reminded" that S1 is responsible for designating NSSEs)

Thanks,

Ben

I&A will respond to the attached letter, hopefully, prior to March 11. However the last question on NSSEs is likely a Secret Service response.

Since the Secretary testifies on March 11, can you provide a response he could use?

Do you want I&A to put it in their written response or to defer to USSS as their response?

February 18, 2021

Ms. Melissa Smislova
Acting Undersecretary for Intelligence and Analysis
Department of Homeland Security
Washington, DC 20520

Dear Acting Undersecretary Smislova:

The deadly domestic terror attack on the U.S. Capitol was an attack on our very democracy, and it is vital that we address any intelligence or information sharing failures that limited our Nation's ability to prevent the deadly siege. We write to better understand the role of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Office of Intelligence and Analysis (I&A) in facilitating the sharing of intelligence related to potential threats on January 6, 2021.

Part of I&A's mission is to share threat-related information among partners at all levels of government and with the private sector. In October 2020, DHS warned about the heightened potential for violence particularly toward government officials.¹ Yet, according to a recent Wall Street Journal (WSJ) article, on January 5, I&A sent a national summary to law enforcement across the country stating there was "Nothing significant to report," in the lead-up to the attack.²

We are concerned about these inconsistencies, which may have prevented adequate preparation by the Federal government in advance of the Capitol siege. As such, we respectfully request that you provide the Committee with the requested documents and answers to the following questions by March 4, 2021:

- A copy of the January 5, 2021 national summary referenced in the abovementioned WSJ article, that allegedly included the assessment that there was "nothing significant to report." Additionally, please describe how I&A arrived at this assessment and provide an accounting of how, when, and to whom this summary was disseminated.
- Any correspondence between I&A and its partners regarding potential threats and or any preparations in advance of the January 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol.

² Capitol Riot Warnings Weren't Acted on as System Failed, Wall Street Journal, Feb. 8, 2021, <https://www.wsj.com/articles/capitol-riot-warnings-werent-acted-on-as-system-failed-11612787596>.

- Please describe any intelligence that was disseminated or received by I&A in advance of the Capitol siege.
- The WSJ article also references a January 4 Fusion Center Network call discussing possible threat information leading up to the events on January 6, 2021.³ Was I&A invited to or a participant in that call? If so, what information was shared?
- Several press reports indicate that the FBI Field Office in Norfolk produced an intelligence report about local individuals planning potential violence and sharing maps of the U.S. Capitol.⁴ Was that report shared with I&A?
- What is the threshold for DHS and its partners to issue a Joint Intelligence Bulletin (JIB)? Why was that threshold not met in advance of the violence on January 6, 2021?
- Press reporting indicated that the U.S. Capitol Police produced an intelligence summary indicating the potential for violence on January 6, 2021.⁵ Was that product shared with I&A?
- Considering that previous certifications of Presidential elections have not been designated as National Special Security Events (NSSE), what is the threshold to declare an event an NSSE and why was one not declared for the Joint Session of Congress on January 6, 2021?

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

Bennie G. Thompson

Good Morning,

The PID photo array was updated to reflect the following changes:

1. (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) designated a Nationwide Special Interest. On 12/26/20, the New Castle County (DE) Police Department reported (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) left a letter for President-Elect Biden at a florist and repeatedly requested the President-Elect's address. (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) left after the florist refused to provide him the address. He then visited President-Elect Biden's residence and claimed he travelled from New Jersey to deliver documents regarding "tips for wisdom." (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) stated he was friends with President Trump, former President Obama, and former President Clinton. He said he would attempt to contact President-Elect Biden through staff or attending political events.
2. The Special Interest sheet for (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) has been updated. On 12/23/20, (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) emailed the USSS his travel itinerary to the Washington, DC, area between 12/28/20 to 01/04/21. (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) confirmed he planned to travel armed and requested a female USSS special agent from a previous encounter to act as his liaison. He also requested a list of the "top five most wanted by the USSS."
3. The Special Interest sheet for (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) has been updated. In December 2020, (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) A warrant was issued by Metropolitan Police Department (MPDC) after he threatened to kill the mayor of Washington, DC on 12/25/20.
4. The Special Interest sheet for (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) has been updated. On 12/27/20, (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) was arrested near the White House for contempt of court.

 Due to the absence of information regarding planned demonstrations at Trump Tower, Bedminster, Mar-a-Lago, or other USSS protected sites, the OSB demo tracker has not been attached. **

The Honorable Christopher Wray

Dear Mr. Wolf and Director Wray:

We write today regarding the violent insurrectionist acts that took place at the United States Capitol on January 6, 2021, and for information into your agencies' actions leading up to and understanding of the digital environment surrounding the attack. While it is clear that the mob of domestic terrorists, neo-Nazis, and white supremacists was directly incited by President Trump at his preceding rally on the National Mall, many of these extremists were already communicating online and on social media about potential violence and plans to occupy the United States Capitol building in the days and weeks before it unfolded.¹

Since the president lost re-election, he has stoked false and unsubstantiated claims that the election was stolen from him and that actions must be taken to overturn the results. This disinformation spread across digital platforms, fomenting a sharp uptick in reactionary calls for violence. Just from January 1st, there were more than 1,250 posts from QAnon conspiracy theorists on Twitter containing terms of violence. And violence was also specifically directed at Congress. For example, on Facebook, one user wrote in a far-right private group entitled "Joe Biden is not my President" on January 5, "There will be a BIG Civil War if Congress allows the election to be stolen."² On Tik Tok, videos were posted with close to 279,000 views that promoted violence at the Capitol, calling for people to bring their "mother-[expletive] guns".³ Several threads on mainstream platforms like Reddit and Twitter, and alternative platforms friendlier to those on the far-right like Gab and Parler, contained content for weeks that specifically alluded to planning the violence that took place on January 6. Those at the helm

planning this insurrection even had enough time to create merchandise to wear for the event labeled with things like, “MAGA, Civil War, January 6, 2021”.⁴

While this latest sharp increase in violent chatter online is a result of the president’s stoking of proven falsehoods, we have seen a steady increase in online extremist and domestic terrorist coordination over the past several years. In 2019, the Federal Bureau of Investigation labeled fringe political conspiracy theories as a domestic terror threat and an intelligence bulletin from the Agency warned of “anti-government, identity-based, and fringe political conspiracy theories very likely to motivate some domestic extremists to commit criminal, sometimes violent activity”.⁵ The Department of Homeland Security and Federal Bureau of Investigation are both tasked with operations to track online extremist developments and prevent their enactment. However, there have been some notable failures when it comes to preventing violent extremists from orchestrating events that lead to violence, such as at the “Unite the Right” Neo-Nazi rally that occurred in Charlottesville, Virginia in 2017 and resulted in a domestic terror attack which caused loss of life.⁶ January 6 is as another such failure, and one that placed the foundation of democracy under threat.

Fundamentally, we are concerned that law enforcement was seemingly unprepared for the mob that descended on the Capitol on January 6, despite the hundreds of thousands of posts spread about it publicly online. It is implausible that the federal law enforcement agencies tasked with defending the United States against acts of terrorism would not have been aware of and tracking the online ecosystem leading up to this attack. To that end, we respectfully request a response to the following questions by January 15, 2021, and include, if necessary, a classified addendum:

1. Did your agencies anticipate a credible threat of violent activity based on the social media posts leading up to the January 6 attack? If so, what groups were involved and how were they organizing?
2. Describe the nature of communication with the White House or any political appointees regarding the online threat landscape leading up to January 6.
3. Did your agencies notify the relevant law enforcement entities of the threats of violence, including through the dissemination of intelligence bulletins, to other law enforcement agencies? If so, when did this occur?
4. Have your agencies adequately shifted resources, personnel, and training to monitor and find domestic extremism in the online ecosystem?
5. The members of the mob were livestreaming their activities on social media. What was the level of monitoring and information sharing in realtime that your agencies provided to local law enforcement and other authorities?
6. Did your agencies have any communication with the online platforms regarding the violent extremist content? If so, what did this communication entail and when did it occur?
7. What cooperation, if any, have you received from online platforms regarding the violent extremist content shared across their sites?

8. How are your agencies mobilizing between now and the Presidential Inauguration on January 20 to prevent a similar act from occurring, and what resources are you dedicating to the evolving online ecosystem?

We thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sir –

Wanted to make sure you were tracking SAIC Gladys's comments/responses on this. The attached version has both his comments and (b)(6), (b)(7)(C) my edits to include Secret Service under partners (and note that we have civil disturbance training). We had not heard back from SAIC Miller with comments.

Per SAIC Gladys's specific comment regarding whether we are members of the COG or not, UD and WFO are signatories on the COG's mutual aid plan document, which is the specific COG agreement the language in the white paper identifies us as a "participant" in.

Let us know if you need anything else on this. Disregard if you were already tracking/have handled.

The Secret Service Is Bracing for Dangerous Times

-Mark Ambinder, The Atlantic

For the first time in modern American history, the possibility of a peaceful transfer of power is in doubt. Extremists swarmed the U.S. Capitol on January 6, and at least some of them intended to hunt down and kill elected officials. During their riot, they left bloodstains on the inauguration grandstands.

Now, in the final hours of the Trump presidency, security forces have turned Washington, D.C., into a fortified encampment in an attempt to prevent further violence. The transformation of the U.S. Capitol into a Baghdad-style Green Zone is unlike anything Washington has seen since 9/11. Joe Biden, already physically isolated by COVID-19, will be further distanced from the American people, who have traditionally crowded onto the National Mall by the hundreds of thousands to witness a presidential swearing-in.

The Secret Service is facing a challenge the likes of which it has never experienced.

More than 130 staffers tested positive for COVID-19 after agents on its protective details were forced to attend Trump rallies and put themselves in the splash zone of a highly infectious president. During the Capitol siege, Secret Service officers rushed Pence—the target of would-be assassins, according to prosecutors—to his office near the Senate floor, just steps ahead of the mob. Now the service must adjust to a world where white-supremacist or restorationist violence is expected, where mobs can suddenly breach perimeters, where drone technology is cheap and therefore easily available, and where members of the military and law enforcement are potential insider threats.

One of the things the Secret Service is adapting to is the previously unimaginable fact that the president of the United States is the one inciting political violence. “You do need to take the president into the threat environment,” Marino said. “It’s not normal that we need to take the language of a commander in chief into account in the threat assessment. But here you needed to.”

On the day insurgents attacked the Capitol, Donald J. Mihalek, a former Secret Service agent and the executive director of the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association, worried about his brother, Daniel, assigned to guard one of the doors to the complex for the Capitol Police. After learning that Daniel was safe, he wrote on LinkedIn that “a reckoning [for] these radical extremist[s] must occur.”

This is a touchy subject. The Secret Service, which guards foreign dictators with the same vigilance as it guards U.S. presidents, maintains that its nonpolitical stance is a rigorously enforced foundational value. “Violence is violence,” Stephen P. Monteiro, a member of President Bill Clinton’s detail, told me. “There is violence on the left and violence on the right. We don’t differentiate between the origins of violence.”

Some violent movements tend to differentiate themselves, as some are more salient than others: The U.S. does not now face a threat from, for example, anarchists (a radical named Leon Czolgosz killed President William McKinley in 1901) or Puerto Rican nationalists (several launched an assault on President Harry Truman in 1950).

Getting into the service requires intensive panel interviews and a polygraph. Usually, agents are reexamined for character deficiencies or suspect affiliations once every five to seven years. But radicalization, especially online, can happen far more quickly than that. A “continuous evaluation process” is required, J. J. Hensley, who worked in the agency’s personnel-and-recruitment and protective-intelligence divisions, told me. “A lot can happen in five years,” he said. Social-media posts have already landed at least one officer in the uniformed division under investigation since the siege; according to The Washington Post, the officer urged “patriots” to go on the “offense” to secure victory for Donald Trump.

Protective advance trips need to change, too. The Hollywood version of Secret Service advance work shows agents looking at a watchlist and keeping tabs on people known to have threatened a protectee.

In real life, Hensley said, preparing a city for a protectee's visit is far more challenging—and will become even harder in the future. "You go there maybe a week ... ahead of the president or vice president. Now you're going to be looking at social media and seeing what's out there on open source. You have to rely on local counterparts because maybe they may have a lot more information than you do just coming off the plane, especially coming out of Washington, D.C., and you land in Joplin, Missouri—you're not going to know everything about it."

"They still have the old threats, and now they have the new threats: We're worried about everything from a switchblade to a drone, which could have explosives on it."

Vic Erevia was the special agent in charge of President Barack Obama's detail from 2011 through 2013. He oversaw the hundreds of people involved in the president's security operation during his second inauguration and white-knuckle foreign trips to Indonesia, Afghanistan, Myanmar, and Israel and the West Bank. Erevia was also in charge of the detail when more than a dozen agents were sent home because they'd patronized prostitutes in Cartagena, Columbia. None was a member of the presidential protective detail itself, and Obama's personal security was never compromised, but that was small comfort. The service had deeply embarrassed the president.

I asked Erevia about how the agency was responding to COVID-19, Trump, and the insurrection.

"The culture is rigidly hierarchical and unforgiving, with every aspect of an agent's performance scrutinized with no margin for error," he said. "I worry, frankly ... how the last four years may have impacted that culture. My hope is that that has not changed. This current period feels distinctly more dangerous than at any time during my lifetime. I believe the challenges it presents will persist. Travel will bring new tests for the protective details as they deal with emboldened actors armed to the teeth. You can't launch the National Guard every time the president goes somewhere, and this will result in greater demands on local partners."

A security plan, Erevia and several other agents told me, is only as strong as its outermost perimeter. And although local police have been sufficient in the past, they might not be today. "You didn't have the emotional content in the environment that you do now," Erevia said.

"Distance is your friend in security," he said, meaning it's best to stay far away from threats. "One of the most immediate things I can envision happening is I can see the travel of the president potentially limited more than what we've seen in the past."

Monteiro predicted a change in the "push and pull" balance between presidential staffers on the one side, who want to make sure the president sees and touches—and is seen seeing and touching—as many people as possible and the service on the other side, which would envelop the president in an armored-glass box if it could. That balance, he said, will likely tip in favor of caution. "Now I don't think you're going to see the staff even want to do any of this ... They've seen our political leaders accosted. So I think it's going to be a natural occurrence where we're going to be pulling back from the type of exposure [to risk] that we've had in this country."

Monteiro was on Clinton's detail in 1996, when Lew Merletti, then the special agent in charge, got into a shouting match with the president about rerouting a motorcade in Manila, in the Philippines, according to author Lewis Gormley. The National Security Agency's embassy-based surveillance had picked up chatter about a bomb plot, but Clinton did not want to change his plans. Merletti won the argument and the day: Police later found explosives underneath a bridge on the original motorcade route. In 2005, President George W. Bush was nearly killed in Tbilisi, Georgia, because he insisted on attending an event where the outer perimeter had been breached. A would-be assassin smuggled a grenade into the crowd and threw it at the platform Bush was on. It landed close enough to potentially kill the president, but it did not detonate.

Trust between Biden and the agents protecting him should be easy to come by. His detail leaders are familiar to him, according to a report in The Washington Post, and the new special agent in charge, David Cho, is highly regarded in the Secret Service. Former agents believe that the current director, James Murray, will retire once the transfer of power is complete. The leading candidate to replace him is Leonza "Leon" Newsome III, who was Biden's detail chief during the Obama administration.

During "National Special Security Events" such as inaugurations and State of the Union addresses, the Secret Service sets up a multi-agency command center in downtown Washington. I visited the MACC during an international nuclear-security summit when Obama was president. In a room I could not access, detailees from the CIA, the FBI, and the NSA processed intelligence streams in real time. I visited the tactical-operations center and looked at a map showing the location of dozens of armed tactical teams staged around the city. The smallest incident—such as when a lapel pin identifying a security agent goes missing – is cause for alarm and analysis.

During peacetime, there are numerous command centers in Washington—for the Secret Service, the FBI, the Capitol Police, and the Metropolitan Police Department. But the federal law-enforcement forces are largely siloed. Commanders and senior officers from different agencies can talk with one another, but the flow of intelligence and situational awareness is not constant. Erevia suggests that a single command center, operating 24/7, with a mission of preventing and responding to events across the region, might solve some of the communication problems that hampered the response to the Capitol siege. "The only way you're able to really manage this stuff is if everybody's on the same sheet of music," he told me, "and that really only happens when everyone is in the same place."

The MACC offers a blueprint for how this could work. However, it is temporary, and once an event is over, it becomes a regular conference room again. After the inauguration ceremony tomorrow, federal law enforcement will return to its traditional posture: Individual agencies will vet information they receive and then determine whether it should be distributed, and to whom. "There are dozens of law-enforcement agencies in and around the immediate vicinity of the capital region. We have to be sure they all have the same intelligence and standing agreements of mutual support that can be activated with a single phone call," Erevia said.

The White House complex has been fortified considerably since the 9/11 attacks. An integrated air-defense system tracks airborne threats, and the Secret Service's Special Operations Division is experimenting with a variety of anti-drone lasers. As of 2019, multiple batteries were set up around the area, one of which was armed with Stinger missiles. During Obama's presidency, the General Services Administration began work on a new shelter-in-place facility close to the West Wing. Its existence is a barely concealed secret, but at a cost of more than $350 million, it is designed to withstand a lengthy siege and accommodate the president, his family, other protectees, and numerous senior White House officials. Counterassault teams carry a variety of weapons, including a device that can shoot multiple electrified darts at would-be attackers simultaneously. If a mob tried to vault over the improved White House fence—a response to intrusions in 2014—it would be met by numerous tactical units, vicious Belgian Malinois K9s, snipers with permission to kill, and, within a short while, SWAT teams from the FBI and other police agencies. The service completed a costly radio upgrade, allowing agents and officers to be in instant and secure communication with other agencies in the region. Motorcade vehicles have been up-armored, and the electronic countermeasure trucks that trail the presidential limousine are soon to be upgraded with technology that creates a virtual fence around presidential trip sites.

The agents I spoke with insist with pride, and some history to back them up, that if the Secret Service had been in charge at the Capitol on January 6, the insurrection would have been stopped much more quickly. The verification of the Electoral College vote should have been a National Special Security Event, Marino told me.

After the inauguration, the fortress of Washington will open up again, and the National Guard troops who have descended on the city will return to their home states. Biden has not yet said when or where he will travel next.

The National Security Agency’s embassy-based surveillance had picked up chatter about a bomb plot, but Clinton did not want to change his plans. Merletti won the argument and the day: Police later found explosives underneath a bridge on the original motorcade route. In 2005, President George W. Bush was nearly killed in Tbilisi, Georgia, because he insisted on attending an event where the outer perimeter had been breached. A would-be assassin smuggled a grenade into the crowd and threw it at the platform Bush was on. It landed close enough to potentially kill the president, but it did not detonate.

Erevia suggests that a single command center, operating 24/7, with a mission of preventing and responding to events across the region, might solve some of the communication problems that hampered the response to the Capitol siege. “The only way you’re able to really manage this stuff is if everybody’s on the same sheet of music,” he told me, “and that really only happens when everyone is in the same place.”

We have to be sure they all have the same intelligence and standing agreements of mutual support that can be activated with a single phone call,” Erevia said.

The Secret Service Is Bracing for Dangerous Times

-Mark Ambinder, The Atlantic

For the first time in modern American history, the possibility of a peaceful transfer of power is in doubt. Extremists swarmed the U.S. Capitol on January 6, and at least some of them intended to hunt down and kill elected officials. During their riot, they left bloodstains on the inauguration grandstands.

Now, in the final hours of the Trump presidency, security forces have turned Washington, D.C., into a fortified encampment in an attempt to prevent further violence. The transformation of the U.S. Capitol into a Baghdad-style Green Zone is unlike anything Washington has seen since 9/11. Joe Biden, already physically isolated by COVID-19, will be further distanced from the American people, who have traditionally crowded onto the National Mall by the hundreds of thousands to witness a presidential swearing-in.

The Secret Service is facing a challenge the likes of which it has never experienced.

More than 130 staffers tested positive for COVID-19 after agents on its protective details were forced to attend Trump rallies and put themselves in the splash zone of a highly infectious president. During the Capitol siege, Secret Service officers rushed Pence—the target of would-be assassins, according to prosecutors—to his office near the Senate floor, just steps ahead of the mob. Now the service must adjust to a world where white-supremacist or restorationist violence is expected, where mobs can suddenly breach perimeters, where drone technology is cheap and therefore easily available, and where members of the military and law enforcement are potential insider threats.

One of the things the Secret Service is adapting to is the previously unimaginable fact that the president of the United States is the one inciting political violence. “You do need to take the president into the threat environment,” Marino said. “It’s not normal that we need to take the language of a commander in chief into account in the threat assessment. But here you needed to.”

On the day insurgents attacked the Capitol, Donald J. Mihalek, a former Secret Service agent and the executive director of the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association, worried about his brother, Daniel, assigned to guard one of the doors to the complex for the Capitol Police. After learning that Daniel was safe, he wrote on LinkedIn that “a reckoning [for] these radical extremist[s] must occur.”

This is a touchy subject. The Secret Service, which guards foreign dictators with the same vigilance as it guards U.S. presidents, maintains that its nonpolitical stance is a rigorously enforced foundational value.

"Violence is violence," Stephen P. Monteiro, a member of President Bill Clinton's detail, told me. "There is violence on the left and violence on the right. We don't differentiate between the origins of violence."

Some violent movements tend to differentiate themselves, as some are more salient than others: The U.S. does not now face a threat from, for example, anarchists (a radical named Leon Czolgosz killed President William McKinley in 1901) or Puerto Rican nationalists (several launched an assault on President Harry Truman in 1950).

Getting into the service requires intensive panel interviews and a polygraph. Usually, agents are reexamined for character deficiencies or suspect affiliations once every five to seven years. But radicalization, especially online, can happen far more quickly than that. A "continuous evaluation process" is required, J. J. Hensley, who worked in the agency's personnel-and-recruitment and protective-intelligence divisions, told me. "A lot can happen in five years," he said. Social-media posts have already landed at least one officer in the uniformed division under investigation since the siege; according to The Washington Post, the officer urged "patriots" to go on the "offense" to secure victory for Donald Trump.

Protective advance trips need to change, too. The Hollywood version of Secret Service advance work shows agents looking at a watchlist and keeping tabs on people known to have threatened a protectee. In real life, Hensley said, preparing a city for a protectee's visit is far more challenging—and will become even harder in the future. "You go there maybe a week ... ahead of the president or vice president. Now you're going to be looking at social media and seeing what's out there on open source. You have to rely on local counterparts because maybe they may have a lot more information than you do just coming off the plane, especially coming out of Washington, D.C., and you land in Joplin, Missouri—you're not going to know everything about it."

"They still have the old threats, and now they have the new threats: We're worried about everything from a switchblade to a drone, which could have explosives on it."

Vic Erevia was the special agent in charge of President Barack Obama's detail from 2011 through 2013. He oversaw the hundreds of people involved in the president's security operation during his second inauguration and white-knuckle foreign trips to Indonesia, Afghanistan, Myanmar, and Israel and the West Bank. Erevia was also in charge of the detail when more than a dozen agents were sent home because they'd patronized prostitutes in Cartagena, Columbia. None was a member of the presidential protective detail itself, and Obama's personal security was never compromised, but that was small comfort. The service had deeply embarrassed the president.

I asked Erevia about how the agency was responding to COVID-19, Trump, and the insurrection.

"The culture is rigidly hierarchical and unforgiving, with every aspect of an agent's performance scrutinized with no margin for error," he said. "I worry, frankly ... how the last four years may have impacted that culture. My hope is that that has not changed. This current period feels distinctly more dangerous than at any time during my lifetime. I believe the challenges it presents will persist. Travel will bring new tests for the protective details as they deal with emboldened actors armed to the teeth. A security plan, Erevia and several other agents told me, is only as strong as its outermost perimeter. And although local police have been sufficient in the past, they might not be today. "You didn't have the emotional content in the environment that you do now," Erevia said.

"Distance is your friend in security," he said, meaning it's best to stay far away from threats. "One of the most immediate things I can envision happening is I can see the travel of the president potentially limited more than what we've seen in the past."

Monteiro predicted a change in the "push and pull" balance between presidential staffers on the one side, who want to make sure the president sees and touches—and is seen seeing and touching—as many people as possible and the service on the other side, which would envelop the president in an armored-glass box if it could. That balance, he said, will likely tip in favor of caution. "Now I don't think you're going to see the staff even want to do any of this ... They've seen our political leaders accosted. So I think it's going to be a natural occurrence where we're going to be pulling back from the type of exposure [to risk] that we've had in this country."

Monteiro was on Clinton's detail in 1996, when Lew Merletti, then the special agent in charge, got into a shouting match with the president about rerouting a motorcade in Manila, in the Philippines, according to author Lewis Gormley. The National Security Agency's embassy-based surveillance had picked up chatter about a bomb plot, but Clinton did not want to change his plans. Sirs,

Please see attached the notes (not a transcript) from today's briefing as well as below a Bloomberg report on the brief.

Secret Service portions highlighted on pgs. 4, 5, ("get back" noted), 7, 8, 11, and 12. We are also researching the get back from the Deputy regarding the list of co-located LE personnel on the 6th.

There is no mention of the USSS in the Bloomberg report although we suggested they include the line, "Cheatle crushed it."

Capitol Officials Denied Pre-Riot Request for National Guard (1)

- Top Capitol security officials tell lawmakers of missteps
- Access to Congress could be forever changed after violence

By Billy House | January 26, 2021 03:40PM ET | Bloomberg Government

(Updates with quotes from Rosa Delauro in the sixth paragraph and Tim Ryan beginning in the ninth paragraph. Includes discussion of a no-confidence vote in the last paragraph.)

U.S. Capitol police were denied pre-authorization for National Guard support two days before the violent insurrection that overwhelmed their defenses and threatened lawmakers, according to written testimony in a House briefing on security failures in the deadly Jan. 6 riot.

The 1,200-person Capitol Police force was overwhelmed by a mob of President Donald Trump's supporters that outnumbered law enforcement officials who were diverted to other emergencies, under-prepared and not sufficiently armed to repel the attack, acting Capitol security leaders said in their testimony.

They said the then-police chief's Jan. 4 request for help from other agencies was rejected by a panel including House and Senate sergeants at arms and other Capitol officials. Acting Capitol Police Chief Yogananda Pittman, who took over after the attack, said this was one of many failures of the day and said she offered her "sincerest apologies on behalf of the Department."

"On January 6th, in the face of a terrorist attack by tens of thousands of insurrectionists determined to stop the certification of Electoral College votes, the Department failed to meet its own high standards as well as yours," Pittman said in a closed briefing before the Appropriations Committee.

The riot resulted in the deaths of five people, including one U.S. Capitol Police officer who was injured in the attack. Another officer later died by suicide.

Security Changes

House Appropriations Chair Rosa Delauro said while Trump was "overwhelmingly responsible" for encouraging the attack, there were warning signs that should have helped security forces better prepare. She also said there will have to be meaningful reforms to "comprehensively protect the seat of government."

The security failures have raised fundamental questions about how to keep lawmakers and staff safe while allowing access for press and members of the public. Acting House Sergeant at Arms Timothy Blodgett said the U.S. Capitol and its grounds may never be the same.

"One of the initial examinations must be in how communications work on the Hill, and how we must adopt and evolve our structures, and our procedures," he said. "We must harden this campus."

Representative Tim Ryan, a Democrat from Ohio, said Tuesday's hearing was "the beginning of the beginning" of an investigation into the security failures that day. He said thousands of National Guardsmen who were brought in after the attack, especially to secure the Jan. 20 inauguration, will stay on for now.

Ryan said the security perimeters around the Capitol building will probably be moved permanently, but no final decision has been announced.

"You want people to have some level of access to their government but at the same time feel protected," Ryan said.

Request Denied

Then-Capitol Police Chief Steven Sund, who stepped down after the attack, had asked the Capitol Police Board on Jan. 4 "to declare a state of emergency and authorize a request to secure National Guard support," but the board denied the request, Pittman said.

That panel -- which also includes the architect of the Capitol and the Senate and House sergeants at arms -- instead suggested that Sund determine how many National Guardsmen could be sent to the Capitol on short notice, if needed. Both sergeants at arms also resigned after the attack.

Tuesday's written testimony covered intelligence failures before the attack -- even though protests were scheduled and online discussions suggested violence -- as well as the inadequate response as the attack unfolded.

"It is clear there was a failure of preparation," Blodgett said, blaming insufficient or conflicting intelligence and the delay in getting assistance from other agencies.

According to Pittman, the 1,200 Capitol Police officers present that day were "no match for the tens of thousands of insurrectionists (many armed) attacking the Capitol and refusing to comply with lawful orders."

She said the department's resources were diverted to other emergencies at nearly the exact time the mob arrived at the Capitol, including a pipe bomb at the nearby Republican National Committee headquarters. Police were also responding to a vehicle with explosive chemicals and a firearm in plain view parked on the same block. An identical pipe bomb was discovered several minutes later at the Democratic National Committee headquarters, Pittman said.

Pittman acknowledged that Capitol Police did not do enough to prepare, when they "knew that militia groups and white supremacists organizations would be attending," and promised to be on a different scale than previous 2020 protests.

However, she said there were no preparations compatible with "an open campus" for lawful protests that would have also prevented the attack that day.

Despite the failures, Blodgett said "every Member and House staff went home without death or serious injury." He said "our evacuation procedures worked well" to move lawmakers to a secure location.

Separately, some Capitol Police officers on Tuesday discussed holding a "no confidence" vote, singling out Pittman and as many as three other department leaders who were working on Jan. 6, according to multiple people familiar with the issue. Pittman was promoted to acting police chief after Sund's resignation.

I wanted to check in with you on the HLS request below. DHS I&A has the pen on the attached Congressional letter regarding DHS preparation and response to the attack on the Capitol. I already worked with SII and INV on potential USSS input to DHS I&A's response. DHS I&A sent their draft input to USSS this afternoon for our review /clearance by Thursday, January 28 at 4:00pm.

I will give (b)(6); (b)(7)(C) a call tomorrow, but I wanted to check to make sure that this reflects your understanding of this process. Currently, the USSS input is on hold for LEG review. I wanted to make sure that I didn't miss something.

Thanks,

CAF – (For Review / Coordination),

Background:

- On January 8th, 37 Members of Congress sent the attached letter to AS1 Wolf and FBI Director Wray on the DHS preparation and response to the attack on the Capitol. DHS ESEC assigned this letter to DHS I&A for a draft response. USSS (among others) has been identified as a clearance component and potential contributor.
- We have been asked to share this letter with leadership and provide any comments, concerns, or issues for inclusion to the drafting component (DHS I&A) within 24 hours. Based on the subject of the request, it is possible that we may receive further specific guidance from DHS I&A and / or you may receive additional guidance from DHS OLA.

Instructions:

- Please review and determine coordination of appropriate USSS response.
- Per standard guidance from DHS ESEC, DHS Components are requested to provide essential comments, concerns, or issues to the drafting component (DHS I&A) within 24 hours.
- We have not as of yet received any formal guidance from DHS I&A regarding specific requests or timelines for this response; further requests may follow. NOTE: While such requests may come through ExecSec, it is also possible that I&A drafters may reach directly out to their counterparts / POCs in SII or other areas. Please advise if OLA has provided any guidance.

- As a clearance component, USSS will have an opportunity to review DHS I&A's final draft response when it is available.

Washington, DC 20515

January 8, 2021

RECEIVED

By ESEC External at 10:27 am, Jan 11, 2021

The Honorable Chad F. Wolf
Department of Homeland Security
Washington, D.C. 20528

The Honorable Christopher Wray
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
935 Pennsylvania Ave. NW
Washington, D.C. 20535

Dear Mr. Wolf and Director Wray:

We write today regarding the violent insurrectionist acts that took place at the United States Capitol on January 6, 2021, and for information into your agencies' actions leading up to and understanding of the digital environment surrounding the attack. While it is clear that the mob of domestic terrorists, neo-Nazis, and white supremacists was directly incited by President Trump at his preceding rally on the National Mall, many of these extremists were already communicating online and on social media about potential violence and plans to occupy the United States Capitol building in the days and weeks before it unfolded.¹

Since the president lost re-election, he has stoked false and unsubstantiated claims that the election was stolen from him and that actions must be taken to overturn the results. This disinformation spread across digital platforms, fomenting a sharp uptick in reactionary calls for violence. Just from January 1st, there were more than 1,250 posts from QAnon conspiracy theorists on Twitter containing terms of violence. And violence was also specifically directed at Congress. For example, on Facebook, one user wrote in a far-right private group entitled "Joe Biden is not my President" on January 5, "There will be a BIG Civil War if Congress allows the election to be stolen."² On Tik Tok, videos were posted with close to 279,000 views that promoted violence at the Capitol, calling for people to bring their "mother-[expletive] guns".³ Several threads on mainstream platforms like Reddit and Twitter, and alternative platforms friendlier to those on the far-right like Gab and Parler, contained content for weeks that specifically alluded to planning the violence that took place on January 6. Those at the helm

planning this insurrection even had enough time to create merchandise to wear for the event labeled with things like, “MAGA, Civil War, January 6, 2021”.⁴

While this latest sharp increase in violent chatter online is a result of the president’s stoking of proven falsehoods, we have seen a steady increase in online extremist and domestic terrorist coordination over the past several years. In 2019, the Federal Bureau of Investigation labeled fringe political conspiracy theories as a domestic terror threat and an intelligence bulletin from the Agency warned of “anti-government, identity-based, and fringe political conspiracy theories very likely to motivate some domestic extremists to commit criminal, sometimes violent activity”.⁵ The Department of Homeland Security and Federal Bureau of Investigation are both tasked with operations to track online extremist developments and prevent their enactment. However, there have been some notable failures when it comes to preventing violent extremists from orchestrating events that lead to violence, such as at the “Unite the Right” Neo-Nazi rally that occurred in Charlottesville, Virginia in 2017 and resulted in a domestic terror attack which caused loss of life.⁶ January 6 is as another such failure, and one that placed the foundation of democracy under threat.

Fundamentally, we are concerned that law enforcement was seemingly unprepared for the mob that descended on the Capitol on January 6, despite the hundreds of thousands of posts spread about it publicly online. It is implausible that the federal law enforcement agencies tasked with defending the United States against acts of terrorism would not have been aware of and tracking the online ecosystem leading up to this attack. To that end, we respectfully request a response to the following questions by January 15, 2021, and include, if necessary, a classified addendum:

1. Did your agencies anticipate a credible threat of violent activity based on the social media posts leading up to the January 6 attack? If so, what groups were involved and how were they organizing?
2. Describe the nature of communication with the White House or any political appointees regarding the online threat landscape leading up to January 6.
3. Did your agencies notify the relevant law enforcement entities of the threats of violence, including through the dissemination of intelligence bulletins, to other law enforcement agencies? If so, when did this occur?
4. Have your agencies adequately shifted resources, personnel, and training to monitor and find domestic extremism in the online ecosystem?
5. The members of the mob were livestreaming their activities on social media. What was the level of monitoring and information sharing in realtime that your agencies provided to local law enforcement and other authorities?
6. Did your agencies have any communication with the online platforms regarding the violent extremist content? If so, what did this communication entail and when did it occur?
7. What cooperation, if any, have you received from online platforms regarding the violent extremist content shared across their sites?

We thank you for your attention to this matter.

2. Describe the nature of communication with the White House or any political appointees regarding the online threat landscape leading up to January 6.
3. Did your agencies notify the relevant law enforcement entities of the threats of violence, including through the dissemination of intelligence bulletins, to other law enforcement agencies? If so, when did this occur?
4. Have your agencies adequately shifted resources, personnel, and training to monitor and find domestic extremism in the online ecosystem?
5. The members of the mob were livestreaming their activities on social media. What was the level of monitoring and information sharing in realtime that your agencies provided to local law enforcement and other authorities?
6. Did your agencies have any communication with the online platforms regarding the violent extremist content? If so, what did this communication entail and when did it occur?
7. What cooperation, if any, have you received from online platforms regarding the violent extremist content shared across their sites?
